Aboriginals of Australia Pursuit for Justice

Meriam People

Written by: Janaya El

Sadly, like many other territories of the Moorish Empire, Murray Islands has been subject to conversion, theft and being escheated. The lands were escheated by Captain Cook on behalf of Britain in 1770. The islands were then labeled Australia, its colonizers unlawfully claiming terra nullius.

Once this information was learned by Koiki Mabo, an indigenous man of Murray islands he decided to fight back. By 1982, over two hundred years later, a child of the Islands blood line started on a path to liberate his people and their lands. By June of 1992 (ten years later) Mabo and three other Meriam people had forced the High Court of Australia to recognize the people of Murry that have been on the land for over 50,000 years. Being recognized was only half the battle. The High Court of Australia only awarded use of "most parts" of the land and wrote in Native law to accompany Australian law. The case was continued by Mabo's daughter Gail Mabo, along with the people still fighting for justice and reparations. According to most media

Sources, the indigenous people of Australia have been victorious. Australia's High Court ruled that the existing native rights would be protected by Australian law until those rights are legally extinguished. My question is how do you legally extinguish human rights? Is the battle over? The Meriam people say no. As of 2019 they have picked up the fight once more. Hopefully this time they will get remedy and not promises.

Is Crypto The Answer For Moorish Economy?

Written by: Janaya El

Is Crypto Currency a viable option for the Moorish Nation to become a player in the global economics game? Well in recent developments major banks like JP Morgan and Fidelity releasing their own version of an altcoin raises the question.

In its conception the first Crypto created Bitcoin was meant to decentralize currency. Its purpose was to detach the value Of the people's means of exchange from governments bad decision making and control of inflation. This would limit the control governments have over peoples energy.

Some of Crypto Currency's features are its block chain security and ability to write in contracts for actions. This could be used for exchanges where both parties can have peace of mind without trust. Protection for intellectual property such as writings, music and goods etc.

But let's face it Crypto Currency is hard to buy and slow to transfer. Even with things like the light network its just not fast enough. Then the other problem is not enough people use the exchange. Also did I mention exiting plans suck.

Let's compare our options. The Moorish Nation does not have a government to print its own notes backed by gold and silver. This would take a tremendous amount of resources and coordination that we just don't have yet. To use Crypto Currency would only take one person creating the code. There's an option to back the currency with gold and silver or even Moorish businesses. This would increase the value and give it stability.

With countries like Sweden and Venezuela using Crypto, the Moorish nation might have someone to trade with. In Venezuela's economic collapse (inflicted by sanctions from the U.S.) the government and its people have turned to Bitcoin for a means of exchange. But this arrangement was only made due to Venezuela's need to keep its country a float.

The government is trying to direct its people to buy Bitcoin through a government approved platform. This way the Nations federal bank gets a cut and can work on regulating. But the people rather buy straight from the market with no fees.

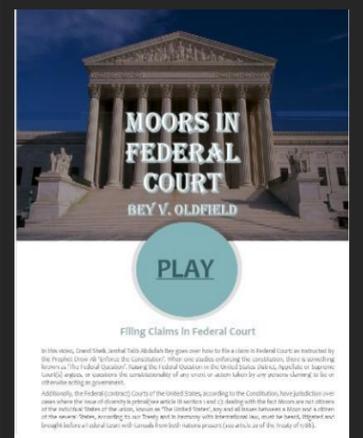

Nobody knows what the outcome will be and how long the government can play a hand in Venezuela's currency structure. Maybe they will follow suit and implement taxes, rules and regulations on the new asset class. One thing is for sure, change is coming.

Is Cannabis Actually Good For You?

Written By: Julisa El

We all know and love the medicinal properties that cannabis has to offer when used correctly such as: Remedy for Cancer, Nausea, Pain Relief, Anxiety Relief, Depression, PTSD, Crohns Disease, Insomnia, Fibromyalgia, A.D.H.D, Epilepsy, Autism, Opioid Addiction and much more. However, what are the possible risks and side effects? This is where "knowing your grow" and how to consume the medicinal herbs as safely and as naturally as possible comes into play.

Frequent smoke inhalation is not good for your lungs; ever. In addition, smoking can create mucus in your lungs, which is the only disease on the planet according to the late great Dr. Sebi, who studied under our Prophet. The same goes when using pipes, dab rigs and bong. They are in fact more hazardous, because the cannabis is being heated more than it needs to be, which is harsh and can burn the esophagus and lungs. Then you also have to consider the butane that is being inhaled when the flame is directly on a bowl or pipe. Some use hemp wick to light their pipes instead of lighters to combat this issue.

the most effective "bang for your buck". When consumed, the chemicals break down slower in your body creating a delayed and more potent release. Just like alcohol, one can over consume cannabis. Some of the side effects can include paranoia, complacency, apathy or laziness. You can also experience a decline in motor function, circular thought patterns or lack of clarity when over indulging. CBD (a natural compound found in cannabis that does not get you high) can also be smoked, vaped, ingested and applied topically for relief without a high.

Cannabis can be used as a medicine for the mind body and soul. As mentioned before, studies show that medicinal cannabis helps with alleviating depression and anxiety. It can also help you gain clarity because it can detach you from your surroundings to help you see the bigger picture. It can also give you hyper-focus; this, is why it can be good for people with ADHD. If you have a task to complete at hand and need to give it undivided attention you can complete said task with ease when dosed correctly instead of resorting to addictive pills such as Ritalin or Adderall. The first is a Methamphetamine and the second is very similar which are in fact highly addictive. Cannabis on the contrary is not addictive physically but people may develop a mental or emotional addiction to it.

Cannabis can also help with weight regulation because it helps regulate insulin production in the body. This may be something to investigate if you struggle with Diabetes. It can also help with joint relief/arthritis pain as well as with muscle spasms and or cramps. We have what is known as "the Endocannabinoid System" in our brain. This system is comprised of multiple endocannabinoid receptors throughout our bodies that helps keep our system working properly and plays an important role in the regulation of inflammation. If there is an imbalance, that is when cannabis plays its part to regulate it. Our body naturally produces cannabinoids that is one of the main components in cannabis. THC (psychoactive component of cannabis that produces the high) and CBD (Non psychoactive). Our anatomy is literally designed with parts directly linked to Cannabis. It is no accident that we even have an Endocannabinoid system.

DO YOU REALLY KNOW WHAT YOUR PUTTING IN YOUR BODY?

You will want to know how your cannabis was grown and what chemicals, if any, were used to treat the buds. Some growers may use whatever means necessary in order to have a successful harvest. This could mean the possibility of harmful chemicals & methods being used simply for the fiat and not considering the welfare of the people who will consume it. Moldy herb is common and can be present during plant growth. It also occurs when the herb is not dried and stored properly and poses a serious health hazard that could be detrimental to the respiratory system. Methods of consumption are another factor to consider. Blunts and blunt wraps share some of the same toxic chemicals and addictive properties as cigarettes. There are safer blunt alternatives, that include natural leaves that contain little to no chemical processing. There are even blunt wraps made from organic hemp and even lettuce! Making your own blunt wraps is also a safer option. Again, when using all-of the above, it still involves smoke inhalation and combustion.

One of the purposes of using a water bong is for the water to act as a filtration system. Not only to cool down the herb to a bearable temperature. It is also believed that the water filters out about 90% of the toxins, cytotoxins, carcinogens and lessens the amount of tar that would enter into your lungs when smoking a blunt, joint or bowl. That being said; frequent use can allow water to build up in your lungs. This can lead to Pneumonia or Pulmonary Edema (Water Lungs/Congestion) or smokers cough. You also must make sure to keep your glass bong clean of any contaminants or browning that may build up to avoid possible infection as well. One of the safer ways to consume medicinal cannabis appears to be through vaporization, which involves zero combustion and heats the cannabis to temperature lower than the combustion point. When vaping, you end up with vaporized cannabis and not smoke. Lastly, eating or drinking cannabis is found to be another safer way and one

When used in nature you can meditate while you medicate to help ground yourself and reconnect with the ancestors of the land. It is said that, when smoked or ingested with the intent for spiritual guidance that it can raise you to levels of higher consciousness or a gaining of "Chi" or energy with the body and aura. Your "ESP" or intuitive powers and foresight are also said to be increased.

There are studies from both "Big Pharma" & independent sources that prove that cannabis is a wonderful way to heal many different ailments for a more affordable price. It is also much less hazardous and less addictive than anything else "Big Pharma" provides. If you do not believe me, look up their government patent that proves the benefits of cannabis. The Natural way is usually always best. All this being said, everything in moderation!

Lowell, MA Detectives Falsify Reports For Search Warrant

Written By: Janaya El

Five Lowell Policy Enforcers Found Guilty Of Violating Due Process

Recently five policy enforcers and detectives were found fixing reports in order to be granted a search warrant. During a routine inquisition terrorism exercise, Mr. Aaron's was detained. In the report (written by Daniel Lavoic) it was alleged that Mr. Aaron was seen taking a plastic bag away from a taxi. Because of this alleged action several Policy Enforcers felt they were justified in using physical force to arrest Mr. Aaron. This report led to a search of 193 Marrimack, where they found second amendment arms, USD notes in the home and minerals that were being used in the creation of medicine.

Once the matter was presented in court the Lowell Policy Enforcers refused to present the report written on Mr. Aaron. After a public records request was submitted the report surfaced. It was found that the report had inconsistencies with the surveillance footage found by public counsel services.

The surveillance footage showed that not only did Mr. Aaron have the plastic bag before reaching the cab, but he was 79 feet away from the location the policy enforcers reported that he was coming from and "running to". Footage also shows that Mr. Aaron did not run, nor resist arrest. Therefore, there was no need for Policy Enforcers to use obsessive force.

Further investigation revealed that although Daniel Lavoic wrote the report, it was submitted in Rivera's name. Rivera was used to testify (despite not seeing the event) to gain a warrant. Due processes was completely violated. Sadly, this is a common practice in these gang related events. I will close this with words from the Board of Inquiry Panel when describing the report: "was inaccurate to a level far more than mistakes".
